8/18/2010 14:24:18	Faye Wells	Mr. Crum states: I am off by 10 inches in height and 10 inches in width. I believe these arms are designed to be flush with the boards. If it was a two piece deal it wouldn't make a difference. The other issue with these one piece boards is that the arm is suppose to be centered in the middle of the smart board. I do believe that it will make a difference also as my arm is on the right side of the board instead of the center. I believe the arm must be flush with the back of the board and centered to make it work properly. I am still missing 10 inches in height and 10 inches in width. The problem is that the arm is supposed to be flush with the board. The other issue is that the arm is not centered on the board it is on the right side of the board by a few inches so there is no way to get the distance between the projector and the board right. It will not focus right or fill up the screen. We are going to hire a person to mount your board correctly	215
